Anxiety is a normal human emotion ... all of us have got it.

I am sometimes called “Kan Cheong” and “Kiasu”, even by some of my closest friends ... and it is not said as a compliment. “Kan Cheong” is a Chinese term meaning nervous, harried or uptight. “Kiasu” is a Chinese term meaning “scared to lose”. What these two terms have in common is the state of being scared and nervous. While some may argue that being anxious is helpful in propelling a person towards success, too much of it can certainly backfire.

I remember the time that I started to learn psychiatry while serving as a resident doctor at the Institute of Mental Health back in 2008. That was where I learnt that anxiety is the usual starting point of mental illness. I learnt that if anxiety is allowed to spin out of control, one can in fact deteriorate to a full-blown anxiety disorder such as Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD) or depression or psychosis. The individual stories of our peers testify to this fact.

Excessive worry about performance in school, about a potential loss of a job or income, about one’s ability to pay bills, about the potential loss of a loved one ... the list is long and consistent. Sometimes anxiety about something is influenced by the pressure put upon the individual by his family members. Families, in turn, face pressure to live up to societal expectations, manifested, e.g., in the Singaporean definition of success, i.e., attaining the 5 Cs – Cash, Car, Condo, Country Club membership and Credit Card.

Anxiety is a normal human emotion ... all of us have got it.

― Khalil Gibran

This is why we need to manage anxiety at all levels – the individual, the family and the community. We can start by managing our expectations. Take stock of what the things that really matter are; perhaps even redefine success.

In Club HEAL, the acronym HEAL provides a clear framework for the management of anxiety. Having Hope that all will be well in the end lightens our burden, no matter what challenge we face.

Empowering ourselves with necessary knowledge and taking specific steps to handle challenges successfully lessens anxiety.

Merely Accepting our challenges and our limitations will make us less anxious.

Last but not least, surrounding ourselves with Love – be it in the form of family and friends, or even furry pets – provides us with support that alleviates anxiety.

For the Muslim, the yardstick for achieving success in this life and the hereafter – thus becoming less anxious – is easy; all we need is a return to the basics of believing, doing righteous deeds and establishing regular prayers and regular charity:

― Khalil Gibran

"Those who believe, and do deeds of righteousness, and establish regular prayers and regular charity, will have their reward with their Lord. on them shall be no fear, nor shall they grieve.”
(Qur’an 2:277)
embracing peace
By Yohanna Abdullah

It is possible to keep worries at bay if you are present in the moment. For sure, challenges will crop up. I may choose to worry about how to get to my cousin’s house tomorrow, or I can choose to get directions. I could also choose to leave the issue until tomorrow. End of story. What if the challenge is something more serious, like my finances? Then I draw up a budget and I resolve to stick to it. And I strive to ensure my money is spent for good causes so that it is blessed. I have faith that Allah will provide in one way or another and my role is just to worship him and appeal for His love and mercy. No need to worry about tomorrow today.

I have struggled with mental illness and much of the struggle has to do with silencing negative thoughts and embracing positive ones. Managing your thoughts is a life skill; it is a skill that you can develop with practice and mindfulness and love.

When we are filled to the brim with love and peace, anxiety will cease and joy will overflow.

The antidote to anxieties? For me, it is to break my time into seconds, each second filled with love and peace. I bar the thoughts that your mind can set off, leading to minor, major and extraordinary in this, if not for the fact that she suffers from depression and anxiety disorder. She was diagnosed to have this condition in 2011 after five months of seeing bomohs (traditional Malay spiritual healers) and religious leaders.

Bomohs and Satan
“A bomoh who had tried to treat me without success asked me to consult a doctor. I think she was fed up of seeing me. The doctor told me that I was mentally not stable and my condition was not due to spirits in my body. Yet, I did not take his medication because I refused to believe the diagnosis — not even when I was driven to contemplating suicide. I wanted to jump off a building and was heard by all kinds of voices in my head.”

She approached another bomoh and was told that Satan was inside her and would not leave her body. Her condition deteriorated as she saw even more bomohs. She parboiled floral bath and lime baths and wore multiple amulets around her neck and waist in vain. Finally, she felt compelled to see a doctor again and took a step further by seeking help at Club HEAL.

Medication is the key
At Club HEAL, she was encouraged to take her medicine and she felt the change fairly quickly. Eza’s mother was initially apprehensive of her daughter seeking medical treatment for her condition. Nevertheless, she was convinced that it worked when she saw the changes in Eza after complying with such treatment.

“After one-and-a-half years at Club HEAL, I feel I was ready to find a job. I worked at KFC. I broke down a few times at KFC, but they treated me well. Later, I decided to apply for a licence as a taxi driver since I could drive,” said Eza.

Self-talk
“I still have symptoms but now I know that my problem is just an illness and that the symptoms will go away after a while. Initially, I started to drive a taxi. I had many panic attacks. The symptoms made me feel as if I was going to die, but I implemented what I learned at Club HEAL — I did a lot of positive self-talk. I frequented mosques to become close to God and gave to charity every day, with a sincere intention to help others, even if it was just a donation of 10 cents. I believe all these helped.”

One day at a time
Being a taxi driver required a lot of courage. Initially, Eza got into minor road accidents because of her anxiety. “Even for a minor scrape, I would cry like it was a major calamity and everyone would look puzzled.”

Nevertheless, the mother of one counts herself fortunate to be able to make a living driving a taxi full time. “I have the support of my mother who still cooks and cleans and look after my son, and am married to an understanding husband. But my mom is tired and tells me I have to do more at home and take over her chores.”

However, she takes her challenges one day at a time as she learns to be more positive about life. She is thankful that Club HEAL taught her how to cope with her illness. She knows now that there is a cure to every illness and that she is on the road to recovery. “Faith is the key and every day, I am getting better and better...” declared Eza.
